Which two statements are true about how IBM UrbanCode Deploy (UCD) organize deployment artifacts?

(Select two.)

- A. Deployment artifacts must be uploaded to Rational Asset Manager, so they can be used on a deployment process.
- B. A component contains in the artifact set (versions) and the automation to deploy it.
- C. Deployment artifacts are typically produced by an automated build and then imported into UCD as a version.
- D. Each component contains at least one deployment package that contains all the deployment artifacts for that application.
- E. Deployment artifacts are stored in an external system (version control, CMDB, inventory, etc.) and UCD can only download the artifacts to the target server as part of a deployment process.

Answer: B,E

Explanation:

B: Deployable items, or artifacts, can be files, images, databases, configuration materials, or anything else that is associated with a software project. Artifacts can come from a number of sources: file systems, build servers such as IBM Anthill Pro, and many others.

E: When you create a component, you identify the source and define how the artifacts are brought into IBM UrbanCode Deploy.
