NEW QUESTION: 1

Which one of the following types of access control should be used when access to a resource is dependent upon specific qualities of the user, for example, membership status, frequency of purchases, or level of certification?

- A. rule-based access control
- B. discretionary access control
- C. attribute-based access control
- D. role-based access control
- E. content-dependent access control

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Content dependent access control involves restricting access to content, such as documents and emails, based on embedded keywords or certain assigned metadata. It works by inspecting the content and applying rules to determine if access is permitted.

This approach is taken by many Data Loss Prevention solutions. It is possible to combine content dependent access control with role-based access control in order to restrict access to content by established roles.
