NEW QUESTION: 1

A company is running multiple applications on Amazon EC2. Each application is deployed and managed by multiple business units. All applications are deployed on a single AWS account but on different virtual private clouds (VPCs). The company uses a separate VPC in the same account for test and development purposes.

Production applications suffered multiple outages when users accidentally terminated and modified resources that belonged to another business unit. A Solutions Architect has been asked to improve the availability of the company applications while allowing the Developers access to the resources they need.

Which option meets the requirements with the LEAST disruption?

A. Set up role-based access for each user and provide limited permissions based on individual roles and the services for which each user is responsible.

B. Create an AWS account for each business unit. Move each business unit's instances to its own account and set up a federation to allow users to access their business unit's account.

C. Implement a tagging policy based on business units. Create an IAM policy so that each user can terminate instances belonging to their own business units only.

D. Set up a federation to allow users to use their corporate credentials, and lock the users down to their own VPC. Use a network ACL to block each VPC from accessing other VPCs.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Principal - Control what the person making the request (the principal) is allowed to do based on the tags that are attached to that person's IAM user or role. To do this, use the `aws:PrincipalTag/key-name` condition key to specify what tags must be attached to the IAM user or role before the request is allowed.

A: This would be too disruptive and Organizations should be used instead.

B: Question did not say if prod\dev\test are in separate VPC or not. It could be separated using business units instead. Hence this is not feasible.

D: This is too much effort and disruption.
