- B. Configure a security group at the instance level which denies traffic from the selected IP.
- C. Configure an ACL at the subnet which denies the traffic from that IP address.
- D. Configure the security group with the EC2 instance which denies access from that IP address.

Answer: C

Explanation:

AWS VPC is a logical isolation of a portion of the AWS cloud. It is used to launch Amazon EC2 instances and other AWS services in a secure, isolated environment. VPCs are used to control network traffic between instances and the internet. VPCs are used to control network traffic between instances and the internet. VPCs are used to control network traffic between instances and the internet.

ACL works at the subnet level. ACL allows both allow and deny rules. Thus, when the user wants to reject traffic from the selected IPs it is recommended to use ACL with subnets.
