NEW QUESTION: 1

There is an opening for a coder in a 150-bed acute care hospital. The position requires someone who can code from a wide variety of medical records using both ICD and CPT. Of the following candidates interviewing for this position, which would be the most appropriate to hire?

- A. a graduate of a 2-year community college HIT program, RHIT eligible, with 1 year of outpatient coding experience
- B. a high school graduate who has applied for entry into the 2-year community college RHIT program
- C. a recent graduate of a 4-year HIM program, RHIA eligible, who hopes to become a department manager within 1 year
- D. a RHIA with 5 years of supervisory experience in medical records who recently moved to this city and can find no other available position as a supervisor at this time

Answer: A

No. GSIs are sparse indexes. Unlike the requirement of having a primary key, an item in a DynamoDB table does not have to contain any of the GSI keys. If a GSI key has both hash and range elements, and a table item omits either of them, then that item will not be indexed by the corresponding GSI. In such cases, a GSI can be very useful in efficiently locating items that have an uncommon attribute.
